The reflections in Kapoor’s Sky Mirror conjure up an almost filmic parade of optical illusions

Articles, page 13

Continued from page 1

Kanye West’s phantasmic tilt for the presidency must rank among the most ill-conceived episodes of celebrity activism

Books, essay page

We once believed the busy social life a sign of success, spurred on by visual displays of hedonistic nights out on Instagram

Joy Lo Dio, back page

I think of myself as a realist and I’m not a visionary. I take my vision as a child of a crowded Brooklyn high school. It’s a place where I stood out, rose to the top, and became a devoted teacher. This was my life, the life that I chose for myself as my upbringing. It became clear to me that my work, my life, and my passion were in the service of others. But because it was so necessary for my own personal development, I knew that I could not simply rest on my laurels and stay in one place.

Thus, I decided to embark on a new journey, one that would take me to the far corners of the world. I would work with children in areas where education is scarce, and where they need it the most. I would use my skills to help them achieve their full potential. I would teach them about the power of knowledge, and how it can change their lives. I would work with the government to ensure that they had access to the tools they needed to succeed. I would work with the community to ensure that they had a safe and healthy environment to grow up in. I would work with the parents to ensure that they had the skills and resources to help their children succeed. I would work with the schools to ensure that they had the resources and support to help their students succeed. I would work with the businesses to ensure that they had the support and resources to help their employees succeed. I would work with the non-profits to ensure that they had the resources and support to help their communities succeed.

We all have a role to play in the world. We all have a responsibility to make a difference. I urge you to join me on this journey, and to help make the world a better place. Thank you for your time. Goodbye.